

The Jailer

My night sweats grease his breakfast plate.
 The same placard of blue fog is wheeled into position
 With the same trees and headstones.
 Is that all he can come up with,
 The rattler of keys?

I have been drugged and raped.
Seven hours knocked out of my right mind
 Into a black sack
 Where I relax, foetus or cat,
 Lever of his wet dreams.

Something is gone.
 My sleeping capsule, my red and blue zeppelin
 Drops me from a terrible altitude.
 Carapace smashed,
 I spread to the beaks of birds.

O little gimlets—
 What holes this papery day is already full of!
He has been burning me with cigarettes,
 Pretending I am a negress with pink paws.
I am myself. That is not enough.

The fever trickles and stiffens in my hair.
My ribs show. What have I eaten?
 Lies and smiles.
 Surely the sky is not that color,
 Surely the grass should be rippling.

All day, gluing my church of burnt matchsticks,
 I dream of someone else entirely.
And he, for this subversion,
 Hurts me, he
With his armor of fakery,

His high cold masks of amnesia.
 How did I get here?
Indeterminate criminal,
 I die with variety—
Hung, starved, burned, hooked.

I imagine him
 Impotent as distant thunder,
 In whose shadow I have eaten my ghost ration.
I wish him dead or away.
That, it seems, is the impossibility.

That being free. What would the dark
Do without fevers to eat?
 What would the light
 Do without eyes to knife, what would he
Do, do, do without me?

ORNY'S ENTIRE ONLY

Only once is it possible for someone to find a woman with such unsurpassed beauty.
 Every moment in your presence is like experiencing
 Heaven on Earth.
 The sound of your voice tickling my ears
 is like the sound of angels singing.
 But when we are apart O! The agony! I long just to have you in my arms.
 I sit about, longing to be near you, longing
 for your sweet perfume to fill the air.
 But I rest with the knowledge that I will see you again soon, another day, another dream...

The Fearful

This man makes a pseudonym
And crawls behind it like a worm.

This woman on the telephone
Says she is a man, not a woman.

The mask increases, eats the worm,
Stripes for mouth and eyes and nose,

The voice of the woman hollows—
More and more like a dead one,

Worms in the glottal stops.
She hates

The thought of a baby—
Stealer of cells, stealer of beauty—

She would rather be dead than fat,
Dead and perfect, like Nefertit,

Hearing the fierce mask magnify
The silver limbo of each eye

Where the child can never swim,
Where there is only him and him.
