

This past year or so has been filled with so many crazy changes and challenges, but also positive changes in my life. While I have you here, I wanted to apologize for my outburst back in October of last year. It was the anniversary of the day I got fired from BlushCrunch Studio and it was weighing on my mind heavily. If it wasn't clear before, it is apparent I am not a mentally stable person. I have struggled with mental issues for the past decade now. I believe I have some form of ADHD and Borderline Personality Disorder, which causes me to have very unstable relationships with people and be prone to such outbursts. I am not diagnosed of course so take it with a grain of salt, but it is a very high likelihood.

The days I posted in this account was when I started taking anti-depression medication, and on that day it had hit me very hard and caused me to get into a very, VERY manic state (Depression medication can cause mania for about the first week of taking it, along with a hard crash afterward). The culmination of my thoughts and feelings on the situation as a whole coupled with the grief led to the outburst you saw not too long ago. What spurred this outburst too was the release of the Dandy's World Halloween update, which featured characters that looked very similar to the concepts that me and Qwilver conceptualized back in 2024. I hold the original designs near and dear to my heart since they were one of the last things me and Qwel did together before we split, and I was head over heels over their designs. Obviously for the sake of privacy I won't ever show them, for respect of Qwel not wanting to reveal them, but just know that they meant a lot to me. Now, I think the current designs are fine, it's just the emotions overtook me and caused me to hate them in the moment.

To address Dandy's World Mox Nox, it was an extension of my feelings towards Dandy's World and BlushCrunch as a whole while I was on my high of medication. I apologize for including someone's ideas, whom which shall not be named for the sake of privacy as well, as it caused major emotional stress on them and their community. I at the time did not consider how they would feel with their inclusion in my project and I take full responsibility for my actions. Mox Nox was a collection of ideas that I thought would be neat to see in Dandy's World, as well as changes to unused characters/trinkets that would make them fun to use. I understand now that a good majority of my ideas would not work in the current state of Dandy's gameplay. As much as I would like to take down the video, I believe the damage has already been done as it has been reuploaded countless times and seen by thousands of people. This presentation was made during the time BC was still reusing concepts to create Toons, Twisted and Trinkets, and I had agreed with the contempt the general public had on it. Today Mox Nox does not reflect my current thoughts and feelings on the game as the game and team has progressed into a better state than it was before.

To address people wondering who the second person in the ONE YEAR video was, it was meant to be my fiance, whom which we have had a very complicated, up-and-down past, some of which delved into the drama, but now we are again on good terms and live happily together. They have helped me push through despite it all and have been improving my mental health significantly. He wishes to remain private and away from the situation at hand, so I would appreciate the gesture to not search him out or try to contact him.

You may be aware of a channel known as the 'RoxSerpent Video Archive' or some sort of it, I can't remember the exact name. These are indeed my videos, created back around 2021 when I was removed from Pixel Bit Studios. I was going through a severely rough patch because of it and my mental health was significantly worse than it is now. You may think I'm a lunatic for creating those videos, and I wouldn't disagree with you. I was going through it HARD. They were never meant to be public videos, only to be viewed between me and my fiancé, and were a way for me to vent out my feelings and frustrations; like writing in a journal but infinitely more mentally insane. Back in October of 2024, the creator of the Archive reached out to my fiancé while we were still both mad/away from each other, and they had given the files to them for public viewing. They regret doing it immensely now seeing how much I've changed since then, but I think it was still a necessary evil for me to have that happen.

I couldn't blame any of you for thinking about me in such a negative light, I have done many bad things: I've been a compulsive liar and a pervert. I manipulated a lot of people because of how I felt, tore friendships apart, and I used people whether it be for sexual reasons or otherwise. Even if it wasn't premeditated or intentional the harm was still done. I acted a lot out of impulsivity and selfishness and it reflects itself in the documents created about me. I drew abhorrent art of minors that to this day still haunts me. No excuses or beating around the bush here; I've been a bad person. What I did was wrong regardless of the circumstances, I should've done better and I am able to admit that now. Unfortunately, the consequences of my actions will always be present and nothing can undo that. All that can be done is to continue moving forward and changing myself for the better. To keep it short, I understand everyone's contempt and everyone has the right to be mad at me. I am doing my best to improve myself as a person and will do my best to make as much progress as I can, hopefully getting myself diagnosed and on some more medication. Therapy helped some, but ultimately the means I used were not helpful enough and too expensive to sustain longterm with how little support I was getting from it so I had to drop it. I would like to get in-person therapy in the future since I feel it's more personal and I can form a better connection with my therapist.

Since October of 2024 a lot of my self reflection was dedicated to evaluating and doing my best to come to terms with the end of me and Qwel's friendship. I had been friends with her up till that point since late 2020 and she had stuck around even after what happened in Pixel Bit Studio because she had still saw good in me. I wish I had just been the good person she saw then instead of letting her and everyone down now. My emotions were all over the place especially in the months following the split; at the time I believed she had just used me or that all of this would amount to something in the future. Me and her used to quote the belief that 'everything happens for a reason' which to this day I still believe, but for a long time I didn't know the reason why everything happened the way it did. Now I know it was a wake up call to better myself and also served as a means to repair my relationship with my fiancé, which in a weird roundabout way I'm happy with how things happened. Had it not been for it I believe things would've been a lot worse off in the long run. I wish I didn't have the cost that it did, not only to me but to everyone, but hindsight is 20/20 and I can't undo it all now.

I think what really should've happened is I should've been honest from the beginning. Lying didn't help me or anyone else, it just made people even angrier. It would've hurt more initially but I think it would've been better for me and everyone else if I was honest from the get-go. It's not easy to tell the truth but it is absolutely necessary.

To end this document, I hope to continue making progress on my journey of self-reflection, healing and rehabilitation. Having my fiancé in my life has made the healing process significantly easier now that I have their shoulder to lean on, and I couldn't do it without them. If I end up having any more thoughts to put out to the world I will return to update my progress. I apologize if I end up posting any further Dandy's World or related content, it's been hard to let go and it's a vice I haven't been able to kick yet due to the feelings I have with the project.. You are more than welcome to block this account or do what you must to not see said content. I am a long way from living a healthy life but I am confident in my ability to press onward. I hope you all have a good day today.